showoff

Game Environments Talk

Lesson plan:

- Tools we can use
  - “Jaquaysing The Dungeon”
  - Shapes of Play
- Open Worlds (and what we learn from them)
  - Breath of the Wild
    - Loops and Control of Information
  - A Short Hike

Gray's (and my) Biases

- Open Worlds
- Environmental Storytelling
- Emergent Narrative

What is a “Game Environment”

- The space within which a player interacts with the systems of the game.
- The setting within which a game’s story takes place

Today, we are more interested in the first bullet point.

What's the Point

- We are creating context for play

Behold! A Mario!

We are discussing using environments to:

- Create Engagement/ Immersion
- Create “Gameable Spaces”
  - A gameable space invites the player to interact with the game systems
- We are elevating the environment from supporting the gameplay to taking an active role in creating gameplay

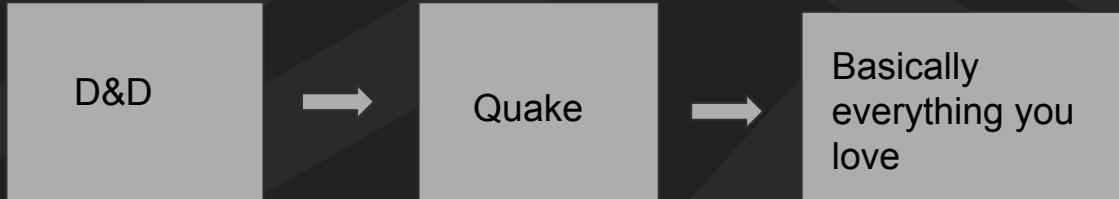

Environment has a central role

Pokemon Route
Just supports gameplay

Jennel Jaquays

- TTRPG Designer since 1975
- Worked for id Software on Quake

Jaquaysing the Dungeon

- Multiple Entrances
- Loops
- Multiple Level Connections
- Discontinuous Level Connections
- Secret and Unusual Paths

Give the player choices

Dark Souls!

Let's Talk About Loops

Loops allow us to

- Provide *and* control player choice
  - Choices are immersive, but difficult
  - Making one choice doesn't necessarily cut off another.
- Loops allow us to manage pacing, without impeding player choice
  - Break gameworld into units

Shapes of Play

- Linear
- Arborescent
- Rhizomatic

These are tools not rules

- Can be mixed

Open Worlds

The whole point of an open world (should be) non-linear exploration.

- What makes this fun?
  - Choices!

A Short Hike

“Getting lost is part of the gameplay”

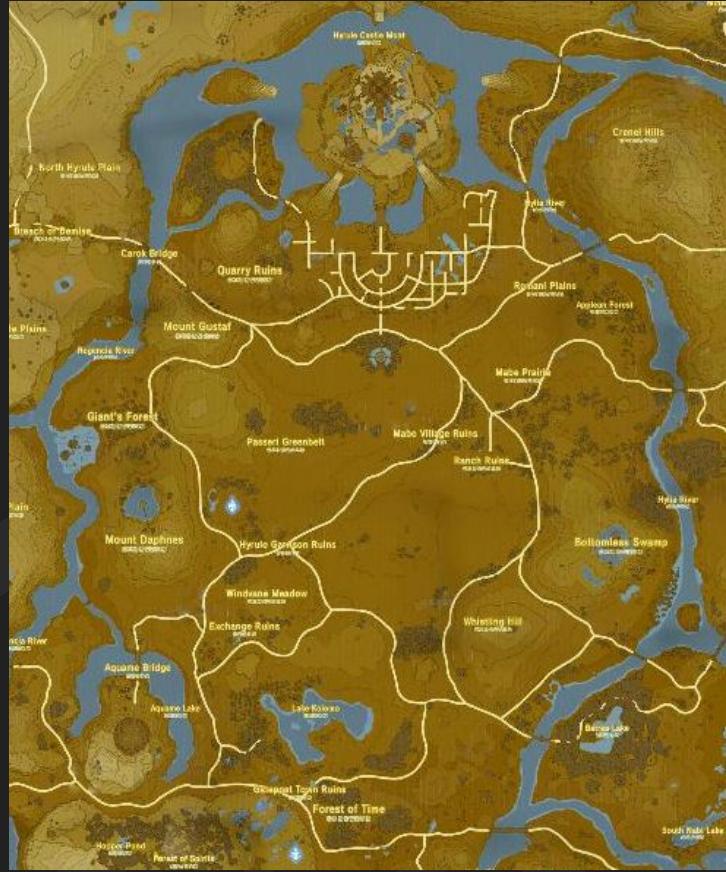

Guide the player

- Curiosity
- Rewards
- Gates

ALL LOOPS BABY

Another Tool: Control of Information

Players Choose Objectives

- This can be incredibly overwhelming

“Triangle Rule”

What about non-open worlds?

- Dark Souls!
- Metroidvanias!
- Stardew Valley!
  - Feels organic!

Activity!!!

We are going to form groups and Design out our own
Dungeons/environments/Space for the player to interact with

We can do this on paper or in more of a 3D sense with construction paper
